

2025-05-15 4:30 p.m. -- Here are the course grades, and the final exam scores. My grading program doesn't show all of the scores at the end of the semester, for privacy reasons. The final exam histogram is at the bottom, as usual. You should be able to access the final exam in Gradescope now.

The exam average is a bit below that of Exam #2, but that's normal for a final. Finals are longer, cover more material, and, when students just need a passing grade, often not studied for as rigorously as they would otherwise be.

If you are just below a letter-grade cutoff, rest assured that I did review your final (some parts multiple times, as noted above!). If there's a student earning a grade of B, C, D, or E, there will be a student with the top B/C/D/E. Being one of those students does not entitle you to the next-higher grade. (If it did, after enough iterations, everyone would end up with an 'A'!) In all, I reviewed eight finals. I'm pretty confident that no big errors remain that would change anyone's grade for the better. Even knowing that background, if you feel that there are grading errors on your exam that resulted in you receiving a lower course grade than you deserve, email me a detailed explanation of why you believe that the deduction(s) are in error, and I'll look into it. If your concerns are for a number of points that won't change your grade, please do not send such an email. (One point on the final is worth a fraction of a percentage point in the final class average.) Demanding that I review or re-review your exam because you worked really hard, or you would lose your 4.0 GPA if you get a 'B', or anything of the sort, isn't a valid justification to change your final exam score or your class grade.

When looking at the final exam scores, please note: The max score possible was 120, not 100. That means an exam score of 90, say, isn't as good as it may seem at first glance. (90/120 is 75%, a mid 'C'.) I will not be uploading course grades to UAccess until later tonight, at the earliest. You get to see them before the University does.

I wish you all a summer that is safe, relaxing, productive, and anything else you hope it will be. Congratulations to those of you who are graduating!

P.S. OK, one more detail: The SCS response rate ended up at 88.33%, which is the best ever for one of my classes, and about 16% better than the 144 rate. Thanks in advance for your feedback, which I can't read yet! (Instructors don't get to see the feedback until sometime -- days or weeks, it varies -- after we submit class grades.)
